Some words that are derived from sounds and are peculiar onely to the French.

Palalalalau. The French march.
Colin tampon. The suiffers march.
Fanfare. The sound of the trumper.
Trantrac. The sound of the huntsmans horne.
Dindan. The noise of great bells.
Tintin. The noise of little bells.
Cliquetis. The sound of armes.
Claquetis, The shattring of the teeth.
Flostotter. The tumbling of the sea-waves.
Le hennir des chevaux. The neighing of horses.
Le groignier des pourceaux. The grunting of hogges.
Le becler des brebis. The bleating of sheep.
Le miollier de chats. The mewing of cats.
La clabauder de maslins. The howling of Mastiffes.
Le japper de petits chiens. The barking of little dogges.
Le heurler de loups. The howling of Wolfes.
Le bugler de bœufs. The bellowing of oxen.
Le courcailler de cailles. The calling of quailes.
Le quillery des passereaux The chirping of sparrowes.
Le coqueler de poules. The cackling of hennes.

Observe that what we use to express by the participle of the present tense, the French use the infinitif mood which often becomes a substantif amongst them: as, beau parler n'ecorche pas la langue, faire speaking never makes the tongue to blister. Il n'y a n'y sel n'y sens en votre dire; there's neither salt nor sense in your saying.
